

Acute Agility: Benefits of Building Flexibility Into Long-Term Plans

The medical complexity of patients continues to rise – pushing healthcare leaders to adjust care models to keep pace with the rapidly changing landscape.

Hospitals can benefit from co-locating beyond short-term acute care, including:

“Health systems are going to have to be able to provide very specialized care, all within their own continuum, to support medically complex patients.”

– Kindred Healthcare CEO Benjamin A. Breier

The case for co-location

Patients with growing medical complexities require care from multiple specialists and around-the-clock advanced nursing care.

How co-location and bed flexibility can help patients

Co-locating multiple post-acute and specialized services on one campus can help create the following benefits for patients and the hospital overall:

Healthcare Consumer Trends

Consumers are increasingly doing their own research to determine the best setting of care for themselves or their loved ones.

For more information, visit kindredrehab.com

